PEOPLE WATCH

► Chances are the USA's most spirited foreign policy debate to-day will crackle not in White House halls or Capitol corridors, but at Texas A&M University. Due to gather there for a day's speeches, debates and forums: Robert McFarlane, ex-President Reagan's national security adviser; U.N. chief Javier Perez de Cuellar; and Stansfield Turner, ex-President Carter's CIA director.

► Making the rounds of book publishers this month is John Tower. He isn't interested in rehashing the womanizing-drinking charges that led to his rejection as Defense chief. Rather, Tower plans to pen what passes for soap opera in Washington: a book about the often-stormy, occasionally intimate relationship between the White House and Congress.

► President Bush and Vice President Dan Quayle will pay back-to-back visits to ex-President Reagan in California this month — Quayle on April 24 as he's on his way to Australia; Bush, the next day.

► Publishing executive Malcolm Forbes Jr. said the Soviets' decision to stop jamming Radio Free Europe offers the USA a chance to spread its policies in Eastern Europe.
